After studying architecture, I began early on managing projects of varying typology, complexity, scale, and budget, from their layout to completion, investigating all the different aspects of both design and implementation. Simultaneously I started working for large international cultural institutions where a collaborative attitude, in depth research and analysis were essential requirements to design and produce public events of outstanding quality. Throughout the years I have been repeatedly asked to present my professional experiences to a variety of audiences which enabled me to develop both my verbal and writing communication skills. Always willing to tackle new ambitious endeavours, time-and-self-management as well as perseverance and prolonged concentration became instrumental in fostering my faceted professional profile.
